"Locate this verse..."	A direct question that includes a verse in the question and requires the quizzer to locate it. An interruption of the reading of the question requires the quizzer to finish the question by quoting the verse word for word. Essence is not acceptable.
Flipping verbs	"Flipping the verb" is when a quizzer, completing an interrupted question, asks for the action portion of the question in the answer or vice versa. For example, "Jesus overthrew what? The tables" and "Jesus did what? Overthrew the tables" and "Jesus what? Overthrew the tables" are all considered in essence the same so long as nothing else in that verse pertains to Jesus or His action(s) and will be counted correct.
Flipping prepositions	"Flipping" prepositions is when a quizzer, completing an interrupted question, asks for the preposition of a prepositional phrase in the answer rather than the question or vice versa. For example, "by what?" and "how?" are considered in essence the same, as is "in what?" and "where?" so long as nothing the information required from the verse remains the same. Acts 2:46 says did eat their meat how? The answer would be "with gladness and singleness of heart." "did eat their meat with what" would be acceptable as it requires the same information to answer it.
Flipping personal and possessive pronouns	"My," "his," "their," "she," "mine," etc may be "flipped" by the quizzer completing an interrupted question from either the question to the answer or vice versa.
Flipping adjectives and adverbs	"Flipping" adjectives or adverbs is when a quizzer, completing an interrupted question, includes the description of a noun or action in the question rather than the answer or vice versa, so long as the descriptor is inclusive to the word it describes. For example, "Do not err, who? My beloved brethren," and "Do not err, my what? Beloved brethren," and "Do not err, my beloved what? Brethren," are in essence the same, and are counted correct because the writer is not describing a different group of brethren (beloved versus unbeloved), but an intrinsic quality of the brethren. By contrast, pairings such as "deadly poison" or "vile raiment" describe a specific type and may not be "flipped" and are counted incorrect.
Flipping the negative	"Flipping" a negative is when a quizzer, completing an interrupted question, asks for the negative of a verb in the answer rather than the question or vice versa. For example, "Do not what, my beloved brethren? Err" and "Do what, my beloved brethren? Not err" is in essence the same and is counted correct.
"...said what?"	Even in non-quotation questions, if the question asks "...said what?" the answer must contain the words that were said. Unlike a quote, a quizzer may stumble and repeat a phrase. As long as the words as stated in the verse are answered, the quizzer will be correct. i.e. repeated words will not be taken as words that were stated. Example: Then Peter said unto them, what? answer "Then Peter said unto them, repent and be baptized.... be baptized every one of you in the name of Jesus Christ for the remission of sins, and ye shall receive the gift of the Holy Ghost. An introductory phrase (e.g. "Then Peter said unto them...") in the answer that is a repetition of the question may be included by the quizzer.

Extra material that precedes the answer asked for	The rule, "The first information given is correct, as opposed to incorrect information followed by an attempted correction," is interpreted more strictly. Any information given before the correct answer, which could also answer the question asked, is deemed incorrect. For example, to the question "...Son of whom?" the answer, "Jesus Christ is the Son of God," is incorrect because "Jesus Christ" is the first information given and could answer the question "whom?" An exception to this is if the quizzer were to give the whole verse in answer to a 3 or 4 part question, rather than answer each question individually.

These guidelines are given to help the Junior quiz community have a greater understanding of how we rule giving the various scenarios. However, please keep in mind, while these serve as a basic guide there are times where the various "flips" cannot be made due to the structure of the verse.
